CARACAS 00000211 002 OF 002

-- The offer would reinforce Post's public diplomacy. US public statements cannot counter all of the President Hugo Chavez' outrageous accusations against the United States. USG assistance in facilitating Venezuela's response to emergencies, however, would help undercut Chavez' repeated claims that the USG is plotting to invade Venezuela.

14. (C) The risks of funding such a project are minimal. Although PC falls institutionally under the interior ministry, the equipment to be provided would be of little use for monitoring the domestic opposition. According to PC's proposal, the operations center is requesting projectors, screens, digital chalkboards, audio-visual equipment, computers, and computer accessories. Luis Diaz, an anti-Chavez PC deputy director, told poloff January 12 that the equipment could not be used for nefarious ends and stressed its importance for monitoring highway crashes and other incidents in real time.

We Win If They Refuse

¶5. (C) Given its record, the GOV may refuse the assistance. Not only did the GOV refuse U.S. help in the Vargas disaster, but it also failed to respond to requests for U.S. Air Force WC-130 aircraft to track hurricanes over Venezuelan airspace in 2005. An ardent Chavez supporter, PC national director Rivero has been communicating with MILGROUP through intermediaries, presumably so he can avoid association with U.S. officials.

¶6. (C) A refusal, however, would play to Washington's advantage. The GOV would appear to be frustrating disaster recovery efforts as its own efforts are exposed as insufficient. The USG would appear to be only trying to help.

¶7. (C) Again, this is a win-win proposal for the U.S. Government. Post's public affairs section could publicize the assistance with some fanfare. It could also easily leak any GOV refusal.
